EPA's investigation into potential water contamination caused by hydraulic fracturing in Pavillion, Wyo., is a "touchstone" in the larger conversation about the technology, 21 members of Congress including Reps. John Conyers, Jan Schakowsky, Raul Grijalva, Charles Rangel and Maxine Waters wrote in a letter sent today to EPA Administrator Lisa Jackson. "Hydraulic fracturing operations are conducted every day in this country, potentially putting water sources at risk," the group writes. "The American public deserves to know as soon as possible if those operations are harmful." EPA recently extended the comment period on the draft report investigating the contamination to Sept. 30.
